To whom it may concern,

Reference Letter for Mr. Juan Felix Pangestu

I am writing to you at the behest of Mr. Juan Felix Pangestu, who has requested a letter of recommendation to accompany his application for an internship within your esteemed organization.

I had the pleasure of instructing Mr. Pangestu in two of my undergraduate courses, COMP2045: Programming and Problem Solving and COMP2046: Problem Solving Using Object-Oriented Approach, during the first semester of the 2023-2024 academic year at Hong Kong Baptist University.

In the thrice-weekly meetings of our classes, Mr. Pangestu's profound interest in computer science and programming was unmistakable. His punctuality was impeccable, never once arriving late or departing early. As a consistent presence in the front row, Mr. Pangestu distinguished himself as an engaged and diligent student, frequently posing insightful questions, actively participating in discussions, and even welcoming the intellectual challenge of debating academic perspectives.

Unlike some of his peers who had prior experience, Mr. Pangestu's performance did not stem from a pre-existing foundation in programming. Instead, he demonstrated a commendable work ethic, diligently grappling with complex concepts and effectively integrating them into practical assignments. A notable example of his commitment was an assignment that required the creation of a Discord chatbot using object-oriented principles. Mr. Pangestu not only completed this task with exemplary precision but also took the initiative to enhance the project, developing a bot that could be utilized within his own server network, thereby benefiting his peers. This initiative is a testament to his passion for technology and programming.

Furthermore, Mr. Pangestu has actively engaged in various competitions, including hackathons and AI contests, which speak to his excellent interpersonal communication skills, creativity, and his capacity to perform effectively under pressure.

Given his academic diligence, technical proficiency, and the ability to swiftly assimilate new information, I am confident in recommending Mr. Juan Felix Pangestu for an internship at your company. His potential for growth and contribution is substantial, and I am certain he would be a valuable asset to your team.

Best regards,
